

Neo-humanism and the Animal World

Words from the thoughts of

P R Sarkar

- propounder of

Neo-humanism

Jim Rider / South Bend Tribune

The universe does not consist only of human beings; other creatures, other animals and plants also have the right to live. So our universe is not only the universe of humans but the universe of all - for all created entities both animate and inanimate.

Jim Lavrakas / Anchorage Daily News

... the collective interest of the plant world, animal world and human world ...

... if people neglect the entire living world - the plant world, the animal world - is this not indeed harmful? That is why I say, there is a great need to explain humanity and humanism in a new light, and this newly-explained humanism will be a precious treasure for the world.

The minimum requirements and maximum amenities should also be given to animals. Today cows, dogs and monkeys are developing; tomorrow more and more animals will be in this category. Animals will also develop longings for different psycho-physical pabula, so they should be guaranteed minimum requirements and maximum amenities too. We will have to do something for them also.

Alexander Natruskin / Reuters

This type of movement to intellectuality will also take place in certain kinds of animals, like dogs, monkeys, cows, etc.

David Gray / Reuters

... many animals will become more sensitive and their vocabulary will increase. ... The functional jurisdiction of the brain of animals will increase too.

Jason Plotkin / The York Dispatch

A day is coming when some of the animals, if not all, will come within the realm of our social membership.

Florence Low / Sacramento Bee Neighbors

All these movements of human sentiments and all the movements of all flora and fauna are towards the perfect spirituality ...